

COOPI PRESENCE IN THE COUNTRY

Since 2014, COOPI has been working with a multi-sectoral approach in Nigeria. In the country COOPI both implemented humanitarian assistance interventions for the most vulnerable groups and carried out projects to strengthen the resilience of communities and help them cope with the aftermath of internal conflicts and climate shocks.

In Northwest Nigeria, COOPI responded rapidly to disasters by strengthening early warning systems, social protection mechanisms, and the capacities of DRR institutions. The aim was to help vulnerable communities better prepare for and cope with recurrent climate-related and human-induced disasters, while preserving development gains. The project improved disaster preparedness and enabled more timely, coordinated responses to natural hazards—especially flooding—across all levels of governance. In Sokoto State, COOPI also delivered integrated multisectoral assistance to displaced and host populations through an area-based approach, combining health, nutrition, WASH, protection, and cash assistance. Activities were closely coordinated with state authorities and other key actors, following safe programming standards and participatory selection criteria in line with the “Do No Harm” principle.

COOPI IN NIGERIA TODAY

In Nigeria, COOPI implements humanitarian response activities and builds resilient livelihoods with a multi-sectoral approach and a focus on women and vulnerable groups adopting protection mainstreaming and participatory approaches.

Today, the number of displaced persons and migrants is rapidly increasing, due to adverse weather events, economic crisis, unemployment and widespread insecurity as a result of activities of armed extremist, bandits and other armed opposition groups in the country.

Our response in Nigeria combines life-saving assistance to vulnerable, conflict-affected IDPs, returnees, and host communities with cash transfers, emergency nutrition, food distribution, water, sanitation, and hygiene (WASH) interventions with longer-term resilience programming aimed at reinforcing agricultural production, disaster risk reduction and environmental conservation, conflict prevention and social cohesion, and empowering youth and women to become economically independent through investment in food value chain development, vocational skills development and support for youth entrepreneurship and participatory planning.

COOPI also focuses on the needs of conflict-affected populations by establishing community-led care services and case management systems for child protection and gender-based violence
